Lesson for September 22, 1963

The story of Joseph is strikingly modern. It is updated in every century. It is true. The actual events of this strange history — this success story to end all success stories — never repeat themselves, for so two lives are just alike. Joseph rose not only to the chance of his lifetime, but to the big chance of all time. There never was another historic moment just like any moment in Joseph's life, never another opportunity like his. The thing that links Joseph with all of us is the way his life history illustrates what every man's life also pictures: namely what Christians call the "providence" of God.

Evil Is Real

The Christian doctrine of Providence, which is believed in every church in Christendom, is a name for the belief that God is in constant touch with his world, and that He so controls and guides the affairs of not only this planet but of the universe so that His purposes do come to pass. The universe is vast and complicated beyond our understanding; but God is in charge. That is the heart of what "providence" means. It is more than foresight. It is more than "taking care of His own." It is more than God's occasionally reaching a hand into the machinery of the world to give it a little shove. The thing that makes this not the easiest Christian doctrine to believe is that there is so much in the world which, so far as we can see, doesn't fit in with God at all. There is a lot of anti-God loose on earth. How can we reconcile that with the idea that God is in control? One way of solving the difficulty is to deny that there is any evil. That won't wash . . . Evil of one kind or another, and specially sin, is too tall and terrible to be laughed off or ignored. Talk about God being hard to believe in! It is less of a strain, by far, to believe in a God more powerful than evil, than to believe that evil is no more than a kind of illusion, something done with mirrors so to speak. An old couplet written for children says, "The world is so full of a number of things, I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings." That's not the doctrine of providence. This world is full of a number of things that make anybody with a heart most unhappy. We have to believe in God through our tears, not pretend there's nothing to cry about.

Freedom Is Real

Some people push the doctrine of Providence too hard. They are afraid that if God allows the tiniest bit of freedom to mankind, something is bound to go haywire sooner or later, and God will find things have gone out of control. They make the history of mankind look like a puppet show with God working the strings. This isn't the doctrine or the truth about Providence; it's a kind of caricature of it, something first cousin to fatalism. The story of Joseph is an illustration of what we are driving at. Joseph's brothers knew what they were doing when they plotted against their brother. They didn't have to do what they did. They were not puppets, they were free men. This isn't saying they could have done good just as easily as they could have done wicked acts. It came a lot easier to do evil, but they didn't have to. Joseph never pretended they couldn't help it! And neither did they.

God the Weaver

God may be compared to a master weaver who stands at the loom of time and weaves the fabric of history. Not all the threads in the loom are beautiful. There is the black thread of ignorance and the crooked thread of pain and the blood-red strand of sin. The pattern might be more beautiful if it were not for the tangled ugly threads of perverted human wills. But God does not throw anything away. He makes use of the evil. He keeps the freedom within bounds. Some will ask, how does God do this? If we knew, we would know as much as God knows — and this is beyond us forever. But that God does this, every believing heart is assured. Here our own story blends with that of Joseph and all the saints. Who cannot tell his own story of how God's hand has been felt in his own life? What Christian has not been led to say, after some painful experience, God knew best?

HOLDING ON — Some years ago an oil company executive was swept out from shore when his boat overturned. A strong tide swept him out to sea. Nine hours later the flood tide cast him ashore, exhausted but unhart. He had "hung on" to the kapok cushion with all his might.

In many small or larger crisis all we can do sometimes is just to "hold on". Somebody has called this the "bulldog's art." He will hold on once he takes hold. You can beat him over the head with a stick, but unlike the mongrel he will not turn loose.

The writer of Hebrews (3:6) gives us some support for he says, "But Christ as a son over his house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." The building of the Christian life is pictured here as the building of a house. Our Lord is looked upon as the one in charge of the building. He fits us together as we hold on to Him.

Whether it is a matter of physical life or death, we have a tendency to grasp any straw to keep from going down. Holding on becomes an art on a higher level —the level of Christian conviction. Man has to develop this art of "holding on"; for this is a part of the preservation of life. Simon Peter gives us good advice when he says, "Let go and Let God".

This holding on doesn't mean that we are opinionated, or are choring ourselves to a certain position, waiting for something to happen. I am sure our friend who was floating on the kapok did more than just cling to the life preserver One time, the story relates, a fishing boat came within 200 yeards of him. He screamed to the top of his voice but they did not hear or see him. So he had to hang on and wait.

A man was being pushed around by his straw boss who was seeking to force him to resign. He talked with his minister about it. The minister advised, why don't you accommodate the man and resign. You can find a better job. "But" the man replied, "I am where I belong." The minister said, "hold on, keep still, wait. If you know you are where you belong the Lord is there to help" — and He did.

Perhaps the "bulldog's art" is needed in times of temptation or testing. We must muster all the grace possible, and ask God to help. Meanwhile, just, "hold fast our profession" (Heb. 4:14). When we are falsely accused remain sweet and wait. When enticed to do something wrong, or to take the unchristian attitude, let us hold on to our "confidence in Christ." When well - meaning people offer advice that may bring our home life or personal life to an immature decision let us hold on to our confidence in God's ability to work out things Usually, he will either by giving grace to bear, or the matter will be resolved. Someone has said that the devil wins most of his victories by always being on hand — just hanging around. Let us remember that God's Holy Spirit is always on hand also. He has taken up His Presence alongside and within us. Hold on!

One of the best ways to hold on is to worship God and serve Him. This will keep one conscience of God's presence and thereby make it easier for one to lean on Him.

The church in your community is dedicated to keeping the channel open. It is a place where you can strengthen your hold on GOD. Attend it. Support it. Believe that you will meet the Lord there, and you will.
